Suicide Warning Signs

1 in 10 high school students indicate they have attempted suicide. Most measures of suicidality in teens have increased over the last 10 years. Parents should know the warning signs, learn how to start a conversation and know what to do in a mental health crisis.

Signs of Suicide

Most people who attempt suicide give some warning, but this is not always the case. Pay attention to your child's behavior for warning signs.

Talking, writing, or drawing about death
Talking about:
- Having no reason to live
- Being a burden to others
- Not being here tomorrow

Feeling hopeless, desperate or trapped
Looking for ways to attempt suicide
Giving away possessions
Loss of interest in the things they care about

Behaving recklessly
Anger, irritability, violence

Protective Factors Against Suicidality

Behavioral changes and social support can help prevent crisis and lower the risk of teens attempting suicide. Develop a plan to make sure your child has some or all of these protective factors in place.

- Coping and problem-solving skills
- Access to health care
- Connections to family, friends, school, and community
- Limited access to lethal means
- Supportive relationships with caregivers
- Strong sense of personal and cultural identity

Tips for Starting a Conversation

Many children experiencing suicidal thoughts are unable to reach out for help due to feelings of guilt, shame or fear. Do not wait for your child to start the conversation.

- Choose a time to talk when your child feels safe and comfortable.
- Speak in a calm and straightforward way.
- Watch your child’s reactions and slow down or restate if your child becomes confused.
- Listen openly and let your child tell you about their feelings and worries.
- If talking is difficult, ask them to write something or share an example.

NAMI HelpLine Call: 1-800-950-NAMI (6264) | Text: “helpline” to 62640 | Chat: nami.org/help
Suicide Warning Signs

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DO</th>
<th>DON’T</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>■ use “I” language in talking about feelings.</td>
<td>■ dismiss how they’re feeling as routine or as something that will get better on its own. Instead, reassure them that you support them and will help them find help.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“I feel worried that you quit the soccer team.”</td>
<td>■ ask questions that will only give you a yes/no answer. Instead, ask open-ended questions such as, “When do you notice that your thoughts are the most intense?”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>■ start with specific signs you have noticed.</td>
<td>■ promise confidentiality. Instead, say, “It’s really important that you be honest with me about what you’re feeling. I may need to tell someone else who can help you, so you don’t have to feel this way anymore.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“I heard you moving around the house last night. Are you having trouble sleeping lately?”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>■ ask directly if your child is thinking about suicide or self-harm.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Have you been having thoughts of suicide?”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Source: American Foundation for Suicide Prevention https://afsp.org/

---

If You Believe Your Child Is Considering Suicide

Do not leave them alone.

Remove harmful objects. Give them space and do not make them feel trapped.

Listen, express concern, and reassure.

Focus on being understanding, caring and nonjudgmental.

Guide them to professional help.

If they already have a therapist or other health care professional, call them. If not, research possible resources.

Ask questions to get more information.

- Are you having thoughts of suicide?
- Do you have a plan?
- Would you be willing to talk to someone?

Resources for starting a conversation