Dear Representatives Fitzpatrick and Blunt Rochester,

Thank you for your leadership in introducing H.R. 2412, Helping Kids Cope Act. In order to stem the crisis in children’s mental health, we must ensure that federal programs are designed to support the unique needs of children and adolescents, as well as the pediatric mental and behavioral health workforce. This legislation would improve children’s access to a full spectrum of mental and behavioral health services when they need them, and in the appropriate setting to meet their specific needs.

The Mental Health Liaison Group is a membership organization comprised of national groups representing consumers, family members, mental health and substance use disorder providers, advocates, payers and other stakeholders, committed to strengthening Americans’ access to mental health and substance use disorder care. We are proud to share our support for the Helping Kids Cope Act, which aims to expand the availability of a variety of pediatric mental health services, in communities across the country and makes long overdue targeted investments in the pediatric mental and behavioral health workforce, where significant shortages persist.

As champions for children’s mental health, you know that 1 in 5 children and adolescents experience a mental health condition in a given year, and most go without treatment.¹ The added challenges children and their parents and caregivers have faced in recent years, including increased family stress, grief and social isolation, have taken a toll on children and teens’ mental health. According to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention, in 2021, 29% of teens reported experiencing poor mental health, while 4 in 10 reported feeling persistent sadness or hopelessness - an increase across all racial and ethnic groups.² Findings were even more stark for teen girls, who were twice as likely as their male peers to report persistent sadness and hopelessness (59%) and were also more likely to consider, plan or attempt suicide.³

Trends related to suicide are particularly troubling, as 1 in 5 high school students contemplated suicide and 1 in 10 attempted suicide one or more times, in 2021.⁴ Since 2019, children’s hospitals have seen a 50% increase in emergency department visits related to suicide and self-injury and a 30% increase inpatient stays. This trajectory predates the pandemic, with emergency department visits for suicide and self-injury more than tripling since 2016.\(^5\)

To address the national emergency in children’s mental health, we must make urgently needed investments in pediatric mental health and substance use disorder treatment services, including both the pediatric mental health workforce and necessary infrastructure to deliver high-quality care to children at every level of need. The Helping Kids Cope Act takes important steps to prioritize well-coordinated and integrated systems of care that are prepared to deliver culturally competent, developmentally appropriate mental health care to children across a range of settings.

We strongly support H.R. 2412, the Helping Kids Cope Act, which:

- Supports community-based pediatric mental health services and innovative solutions to increase care coordination and integration and facilitate early intervention.
- Invests in the pediatric mental health and addiction workforce through enhanced training and retention of pediatric providers.
- Expands our national capacity to provide care to children across the continuum of care, including for those who require inpatient treatment and step-down levels of care.

We thank you for your commitment to strengthening children’s mental health by prioritizing federal investments which will improve children’s access to mental and behavioral health services delivered by well-trained pediatric professionals. We look forward to working together to advance H.R. 2412, Helping Kids Cope Act to ensure children can receive the support they need to cope with mental health conditions and grow into healthy adulthood.
